Cutting Class

BY REBEKAH FOWLER
STAR REPORTER

Valley College has been ordered to cut 3.4 million dollars from their 1997-98 fiscal year budget by the Los Angeles Community College District.

"If our expenses in 1997-98 are the same as they were in 1996-97 we will over spend our current allocation by 3.4 million dollars, therefore, we have to eliminate some expenses," said Valley College President Tyree Wieder.

One week before the Fall semester began 102 classes were canceled as part of the elimination of expenses. Many students and faculty found out their classes were canceled on the first day of school.

The final decision on the budget is expected to be made at the district's board of trustees meeting Monday.

Adjunct faculty member Frank Bello said although disappointed he understood that it was a business decision. Bello taught a public relations class in the evenings at Valley.

Classes with less than 15 students enrolled were cut from the Fall schedule. There were also cutbacks in the evening Library hours, the Learning Center and Math Lab hours. The entire campus will be affected by the budget cut Wieder said.

Although classes were canceled several departments had classes that were combined for one class. There were 15 classes added to the Fall schedule. The process is just beginning, according to Wieder, but there will be no more classes cut from the Fall schedule.

"It was very bad. Luckily I was able to get another class. I think that it is unfair because that is why we are here to get an education," said Diane Melk a social science major.

Students from Valley College, are planning a rally to protest the budget-cutting. They are taking their rally to the LACCD's office on September 15, 1997.

"We cannot allow them to cutback the student services. If we don't do something now Valley College won't have a future," said Deborah Greenspan, business administration major.

The LACCD Chancellor Bill Segura said the budget-cutting strategy was not a bogus scheme by his administration to fight the unions or to punish anyone. It is an attempt to protect jobs while strengthening their financial footing. Budget cuts were ordered to all of 10 the community colleges within this district.

Math Lab Hours Substract

By SYLVIA FIGUEROA
STAR REPORTER

Hours for the math lab have been drastically reduced due to budget cuts from the Los Angeles Community College District.

The math lab, was first opened during the Fall of 1995 for a period of one year and it was originally operated by paid tutors. Funded by the Associated Student Union and the Valley College Budget; for the purpose of assisting students in math tutoring, math computer tutorials and videotapes for some math courses.

Mary Hito explains that $22,000 yearly is needed to run the lab. The lab was available to students for a total of 38 hours per week, last year.

The math lab today is being operated by volunteer tutors only, whom are available during the daytime. Hours have been reduced to 25 hours per week, without any evening hours available.

Arlene Arcas, evening student enrolled in Math 115 commented, With the need to maintain a day job, it is impossible to visit and get any tutoring during the day hours. I may need to drop this class if I am unable to get the extra help I need for my homework and exams.

Kirsten Wilson, who is also enrolled in this class said, "I simply feel it is an injustice to the evening students, who are left suffering the consequences of this reduction of hours."

Hito attended an ASU meeting on Tuesday and said that $1,200 was offered to the math lab. She is uncertain as to when evening hours will be added to the math lab's current schedule.

It is not know whether the math lab will offer evening hours.

In the meantime evening students are suffering the consequences of these changes.

UPS Strike Delays Text Books

By STEVE BELAND
STAR REPORTER

The recent United Parcel Service strike delayed the arrival of various textbooks to the Valley College bookstore.

The 15-day strike began just as publishers were shipping textbooks for the fall semester. Shipments quickly backlogged as alternate shipping companies scrambled to provide delivery service to dissatisfied UPS customers.

At the beginning of the strike, the bookstore was receiving several pallet loads of textbooks a day from Roadway Package System (RPS), according to Assistant Bookstore Manager David Dever.

Dever said his shipments decreased in size as the strike progressed. Within days, RPS notified him that there would be a limit of 36 boxes delivered per day, regardless of the contents.

Dever said he made alternate arrangements for book deliveries after his RPS shipments were sharply curtailed. Because of the uncertain status of UPS shipments, he said he attempted to pick up packages at the Van Nuys UPS facility but was denied entry. He added that UPS made only two deliveries during the strike.

Dever also said that some suppliers made book deliveries using personal vehicles.

Although the strike ended on Aug. 18, the first day of the fall semester, the lack of available textbooks frustrated students and instructors during the next two weeks.

Daytime student Wendy Hughes was unable to find a required textbook for her Anthropology 102 class. Hughes said the bookstore staff told her they did not know when the book would arrive.

Hughes said her instructor advised the class to purchase the previous edition of the textbook, which was available in the bookstore. The old book cost $38 less than the new book, but students would be unable to sell it back at the end of the semester.

Dever said the bookstore hired an additional 30 people to cover the two-week "rush" period at the beginning of the semester.

He said that even with the additional staff, it was impossible to keep pace with the number of book inquiries. He added that the best time for students to call for book inquiries is after 3 p.m.

Dever said students from Pierce College and Mission College were also buying books from the Valley College bookstore because of similar shortages at their schools.

He added that although the bookstore cannot refuse to sell textbooks to anyone, they try to keep books for enrolled Valley College students by requiring students to show a current registration receipt at the time of purchase.

Dever said another problem was that students on standby lists were buying textbooks for classes they weren't officially enrolled in.

He said students told him that some instructors will not add standby students to a class if they haven't purchased the textbook.

Standby students may purchase textbooks, but they cannot return those books if they are unable to add the class, Dever added.

PROPOSITION 209

BY CARMEN PINTO
STAR REPORTER

Proposition 209, the measure to end Affirmative Action was legalized effective August 28, 1997. It prohibited discrimination and preferential treatment by State and other public entities.

Prop. 209 was introduced by State and Federal Legislature in the November 5, 1996 Ballot. It was approved by the majority of voters, who were in favor of ending Affirmative Action. Opponents, however, immediately took the measure to a U.S. District court where a temporary restraining order was granted.

It remains to be seen what the approval of Prop. 209 will accomplish. For now, many unsatisfied individuals, specifically minorities, continue to demand an appeal.

Valley College students voiced their concerns regarding this measure. Some students believe the approval of Prop. 209 will give Caucasians the preferential treatment once again.

Hootchieville?

By LIZ RODRIGUEZ
STAR REPORTER

The thermometer bursts as sweltering summer heat threatens to turn Los Angeles into a giant ocean of perspiration.

Meanwhile, Valley College students are forced to attend class in pitiful, unairconditioned classrooms that seem more like broilers.

In order to stay cool, students have to wear a minimal amount of clothes; sandals, shorts and tank tops, which is completely understandable.

This isn't the 1800s when people were forced to cover up 95 percent of their bodies, but ladies, really, this does not mean we have the right to dress like Hootchie Mama's.

A couple of weeks back, a girl strutted from the bungalow area to one of the buildings on the other side of campus. She was clad in skintight underwear-length jean shorts, a bare midriff, spaghetti-strap tank top (white bra straps glaring) and 5 inch Frankenstein-in-drag platform shoes.

She looked like something that belonged on the Sunset Strip at 4 a.m.

Unfortunately, she is not the only one.

There are many who wear tiny skirts and minuscule, cleavage exposing blouses, which let's face it, leave nothing to a man's imagination.

The shoes, well, every woman must have great shoes, but let it be known that the prettier a shoe is, the more uncomfortable it is.

"Some men cannot help but gawk at scantily clad women, and some women can't help but stare in disgust."

These girls do not look comfortable rushing from one side of campus to the other in 6 inch heels.

If they dress like this to go to school, one can only imagine what they wear, or do not wear to parties and clubs.

The campus is a learning environment and should not be treated like a bar, nightclub or strip-joint. Besides, people find it distracting.

Some men cannot help but gawk at scantily clad women, and some women can't help but stare in disgust.

Furthermore, women dressed like harlots can give perverted males the wrong idea about them and women in general.

This is not an ideal world and while we would like to fancy that we can all behave like mature adults, there are some men who, sadly, still do not understand.

Dressing in such a manner (particularly in the middle of the afternoon,) is completely unattractive. It gives the female a degenerate look and she therefore gets treated as such.

There is a fine line between looking sexy and looking like a Hootchie Mama. Can't we save the costume show for Friday nights?

Who Asked U?

By LEO SMITH
STAR REPORTER

I wish I had the gall to write about something other than the death of a Princess, but I don't have the humility to let an event like this pass by without spewing out my opinion.

As a minuscule fraction of a gear revolving in the media machine I am not immune to a feeling of having had a hand in her murder.

Luckily, I quickly exorcised such thoughts and am not about to sit down and lay that blame on anyone else (the guilty know who they are).

The Princess was above such finger pointing, and I will attempt in this rant to honor her spirit in deed, not misdirected anger.

It is pointless to wax poetic on someone whose every moment was documented for an adoring, and possibly suffocating, public.

For a Princess whose every move was an exercise in flawless grace, that adoration was warranted tenfold.

The Princess was not oblivious to this attention and, unlike others in similar positions, unwaveringly lent her royal title to causes unpalatable to most celebrities, let alone a monarchy.

Her manipulation of the media lent an air of regality to causes both gut-wrenching and distinctly glamorous.

Before her, who cared about innocent land mine victims in some war-torn nation time forgot or victims closer to home whom Christ wouldn't touch (mere exaggeration, I don't mean to piss off the zealously religious)?

Whether it was a hug given to a leper, a tear shed for a land mine victim or a not-so-simple glance shared with a dying AIDS sufferer, her compassion was assuredly genuine and infectious.

Quite on purpose, she deftly channeled our adoration for her into these minor tragedies, drawing us intimately into the suffering of others.

That was her gift, not a hokey fairy tale ending for herself, but the ability to fulfill the wishes of others.

Given the choice, it is a fate most of us would forsake, but one she snatched with open arms.

Sure, Mother Theresa did the same thing for those God forgot long before the Princess was conceived, God bless her.

However, we expect that selflessness from nuns, not royalty.

Finally, the Princess' legacy will not be the sum of her personal tragedies, but the ascension of her young Prince to the throne.

Her child will, hopefully, be the embodiment of that very compassion that separated the Princess from her in-laws.

Long live the Monarchy! Hip, hip, bully and all that crap.

The Truth Hurts: Are You Wasting Your Time?

By DEEANNE McCLAIN
OPINION EDITOR

Some students are spending more time dropping classes than attending them.

Last spring, out of almost 14,000 Valley College students, about 4,000 dropped some or all of their classes, according to Margaret Redmon, Senior Office Supervisor of Admissions.

Almost one third of all active students dropped classes during the Fall '96 semester. What is the deal with that? The rules on dropping appear to be far too lax.

Students should have less time to drop their classes in order to make room for those who are desperately running for that class. How about only three days to drop a class without a fee and 10 school days instead of 20 to drop without receiving a "W"?

What if the teachers start dropping those who don't even have it together enough to attend the first class?

These ideas may sound too tough, but what about those who are on the waiting list, attending class and doing homework? Imagine that desperate student who has to wait until the drop deadline to see if they can be added into that class. They could be sacrificing their whole class schedule just because some slacker can't decide if they can handle the work load.

Community colleges get funded for the number of bodies, or lack thereof, in their classrooms and lose money again when students drop their classes. It can't be cheap to process 4,000 drop slips.

These are things that students who sign up for classes should think about. The college budget affects us all. Several classes were canceled just this semester due to budget cuts.

Don't get me wrong. If one has a valid reason to drop a class due to work or family emergencies, exceptions should of course be made. But there are those who sign up for classes knowing that they will probably drop it, or those who drop just because the class seems hard or boring.

What a waste of everyone's time. This is college, kids. It is not supposed to be easy. College is like a job. One doesn't always get to choose one's boss or duties. The pay is a degree or enough units to transfer.

So what about those who drop out all together? President Tyree Wieder's office conducted a survey last fall of about 300 students who dropped and the results are not surprising. Most people drop due to work related, family or financial reasons.

Those in the choice related category dropped because they had unclear goals, took too many units or did not know the college policies on drop dates. Students who left due to preparation had either poor English language or math skills, or checked that the classes were too hard or that they were getting poor grades.

Interpersonal reasons include problems with instructors, problems with someone in class and problems with college personnel. Are these really good reasons to drop classes? Why don't people take their future more seriously? Tough it out folks. All of our futures may depend on it.

"Sometimes other things take priority over school. You gotta do what you gotta do, like put money in your pocket and food on the table, but if you're just dropping because you're bored, that's silly. That is why they give you a catalog of what the class is going to be about."

Cameron Perry

"You should be able to drop at the beginning but there should be a deadline. Dropping with a "W" shouldn't even be an option. You should have the first couple of weeks to drop it and after that you should get a fail. By then you should know if you can do it or not."

Shani Pahjuddin

Your Thoughts on Dropping Classes

"They should know what they want and they should know that they are in college and that this is not high school. They should decide what they want beforehand. There is no way you can keep someone from dropping out of class, but the fee should remain with the school."

Dr. Pat McClenahan

"Kids think that this is just community college, they don't have a good work ethic. They don't want to be committed."

Shooting the Machine...

By IRIS BROWN
STAR REPORTER

This semester Los Angeles Valley College's Broadcasting Department, chaired by Professor Jack Sterk, is in the process of developing a student production company called "The Machine."

The Machine has named Alan Sacks, former director of "Welcome Back Kotter," as its executive producer. Sacks, currently the instructor for Broadcasting 1, 25, and 26, said, "Through this experience students will acquire professional skills and procedures to obtain employment."

In addition, crew members for The Machine have brought Professor Scott Merrifield from the broadcasting department as co-producer.

Merrifield will be instrumental in field production. Other instructors include Betty Ballew, Andrean Zahler and Gail Nastasia, who is also working on the developing of a cable magazine.

The Machine's present project is about life here on campus, highlighting behind the scenes action as it occurs.

Field members will be talking with students about attending school here, how to handle college classes and many other topics.

The Machine plans to show plenty of substance at LAVC.

The first scheduled shooting was Sept. 10 in front of Monarch Hall for "Club Day." The Machine's plans to shoot at various locations and events including water polo on Sept. 16 and 18, as well as Assistant Dean of Student Services' John Barnhart's farewell dinner on Sept. 19.

Crew members work on a scene at a LAVC room.

Todd McCormick is the subject of an investigation by the DEA for growing marijuana in his Bel Air home with the intent to distribute.

He was arrested last month and released on $500,000 bond which was posted by actor Woody Harrelson. Larry Flynt is financing his defense. Mr. McCormick was active in getting Prop 215 (the medical marijuana law) passed, has established compassion clubs for those in need of this medicine, and he himself holds an international prescription for treatment of cancer and pain relief. Regardless of his history, he faces a mandatory ten year sentence if convicted.

He has graciously accepted our invitation to speak here at L.A. Valley College.

In addition to his in depth knowledge of the medicinal uses of marijuana, he will also be discussing the history and vast potential of hemp.

Taking a look at the... '97 Valley College Party Scene

By JULIO CORTEZ
STAR REPORTER

For most Valley College students, flyer parties have become their number one activity.

Flyer parties are the moderation of the rave and club scene. It all starts with the distribution of the colorful and graphical flyers throughout the campus. Flyers are a form of informing the party crowd about upcoming events.

Once the location and date have been confirmed, party goers head out to take part of the excitement of dancing. They gather in a secret location in search of fun while forgetting about their responsibilities such as work and school. Its a time when they can feel good about the end of a week of hard work.

Though it keeps teens off the trouble of the streets, the night activities are doubted by many. Party people are often criticized for their activities by the community.

These parties are held throughout the San Fernando Valley. In most cases they are held in a residential community. The loud music and bright blights bother residents in the area, making them complain to the local authorities who respond quickly and stop the activity. Groups of party goers, also known as party crews, are forced to have their activities in secret for the fear of having their parties stopped or rated.

"We don't do anything bad," Hector Quintanilla, 18, Valley College student from North Hollywood, said. "It's hard to show that we're just looking for a little fun."

The party goers not only have to prove that they're fun-seekers. They often have to prove that the partying doesn't get in between their education.

According to Lorenzo Trujillo, Valley College's Associated Student Union (ASU) president, the handling of the flyers throughout campus is not a problem with school officials.

This is the first installment of a series of articles in which will take a look at Valley College party scene.

Joker's Wild, an event by Modern Mission and Possessed Ent., took place on the night of Aug. 30, to celebrate the Labor Day weekend. The party crews ITM, IVS, and Rebel Familia, where amongst the special invites to the event which was held in the backyard of a Pacoima residence. The DJ lineup was composed of locals Crops, Phrek'm, DR. Who, Squek, J-Boy, E-pex, Chunky, Oregano, Totts, Eddie Quezar and Gusto. The $3 cover charge was a bargain for the excitement. The attendance, mostly made up of female party seekers, increased rapidly by 11 p.m. Even though the only restriction of admittance was no violence, there was screaming and shoving as a result of an argument between two male party crews. The people in charge of the event acted quickly and in a mature manner and managed to settle down those involve in the embarrassing scene.

STAR REPORTERS

Dear Students: This semester we are changing the format of our advice column. We think the old adage, "two heads are better than one" is true.

I am happy to join The Valley Star as half of Iris & Angie.

Both Iris and I have counseling experience (Iris as the advice columnist for the LA TradeTech College, and myself as a counselor at a Massachusetts shelter for abused teens).

We are here to help LAVC students. It is my hope that those students who are experiencing personal difficulties will allow us to help.

Let me be very clear. No subject is off limits. Sexuality, depression, anxiety, and addiction are issues that don't often get discussed openly, yet they affect many of us on a daily basis.

In addition to giving friendly but candid advice, we will also try to refer those in need to the appropriate experts.

Thank you,
Angie

Dear Iris & Angie: I have a serious crush on one of the finest teachers here on campus. I stay after class just to look at him as he helps other students with extra explanations on his lectures. I become involved in the conversations. I know that I'm one of his favorite students from last semester. He is cool and I want to ask him out on a date, or over to my apartment for drinks, dinner and dancing. Please tell me how to go about doing this. I need a tactful way to approach him.

Seriously in love with my instructor

Take it away, Iris...

Dear In Love With My Instructor: The best advice I can give you may not be what you want to hear. Consider finding a new love interest. Possibly a fellow student but not another professor, please. This situation could only cause you both heartache and pain. It is not professional nor ethical for students to date their instructors. You could cause this fine teacher his job. Then he might not hold your interest anymore. Teachers have always been idolized and loved by their students. Some of us fantasize more than others. Take some good advice and let it be a fantasy only. I know a student who dated one of her professors and it turned out to be more disastrous than you can imagine.

Sincerely, with your best Interest In Mind,
Iris

MONARCHS HIT THE WATER FOR ANOTHER SEASON OF MEN'S WATER POLO

By JULIO CORTEZ
STAFF WRITER

The men's Water Polo Team made the finishing touches before the season opener on Sept. 5.

"This year we are more talented," Coach Bill Krauss said about the advantages this year's team has. "I'm very optimistic."

Coach Krauss said that unlike last year's team, which was 8-11, this team is now stronger in the front court which is better for the team because it gives the defense less work.

The team will be led by All-Western Conference players Jason Payne, Raymond Akopian and Gilbert Abramyan. These stars will be getting a lot of help from the rest of the team which is formed mostly of newcomers.

According to Coach Krauss, the team has three excellent goalies in Peter Driscoll, Ed Saakyan and Eric Moe, whom are all new to the team. Mike Scarcelli, Jon Conrad, Joey Bennett and Brian Ellis are also new to the team. Coach Krauss said that he is most excited about the team's left handers, Towner Douglas, Gilbert Abayman and Chris Pedini.

According to the team's coach, the addition of the left handers is an advantage to Valley in regards of power plays.

The teams has high goals now that the team has progressed in practice. The team looks forward to getting tougher in conference play in order to win it.

"We have a lot of good players and a good bench," Moe said. "It's good for the team because it's hard when starters work for seven minutes straight."

Although it's early to predict, Moe said he feels the season will be a good one.

"We need to take one game at a time," Moe said.

With the start of the new football season come some changes for the Monarch football team.

The first of these changes comes in the head coach's position. Former Head Coach Jim Fenwick was offered and accepted a position as head football coach at California State University at Northridge, leaving his position open. Upon Barlow's departure, the job was filled by Offensive Coordinator Gary Barlow. Barlow became the offensive coordinator at Valley in 1993.

Other changes that took place include the loss of 1996 All State quarterback David Lins, who transferred to San Diego State University. Sophomore Tom Raciuss will replace Lins. Leaford Hackett will be returning to the wide receiver position trying to add to his 32 receptions from last year.

Last year's Second Team Defensive Player Jeff Macrae, along with Edgar Nava and Damion Thompson will lead the defense this year.

These five players along with the rest of the returning players, who make up approximately 60% of the team, were part of last year's team that finished the season ranked number two in California and third in the nation among community colleges. The also helped the team to a victory over Allen Hancock in the 1996 No Fear Bowl.

"We have a good sophomore class," Coach Barlow said. "We also have great leadership and great coaching."

Coach Barlow said he was happy with the coaches' success in recruiting.

"We got every player that we wanted to except one," Coach Barlow said.

This year's schedule, has the Monarchs facing off against three or four of the top defenses in the conference.

Coach Barlow said that they have the players to be a successful team, but he would like to work on a few things.

The first thing he would like to work on is the kicking game. He said that it is not a weakness, but it's an important part of the game. The other thing, is he would like the team to play a more consistent brand of defense.

The Monarchs will play their first home game on Oct. 4 against Bakersfield.

Women's Water Polo Team Enters Its Inaugural Season

STAR REPORTER

The first season of the women's water polo team is about to begin.

Head Coach Wonmeen Jun said that he isn't expecting a lot from the team this season, due to the fact that there are a lot of inexperienced players on the team. The only thing that he said he is expecting is improvement.

"There is a big gap in the ability of the team," Jun said. "There are girls on the team who never played the game before. The most important thing now is to get them to mesh together well."

Another important factor of the team Jun said, is the age difference of the members of the team. The members ages range from about 18 to 34.

Jun is new to coaching. He started his career at Valley as a swimmer and a member of the men's volleyball team.

Jun said that he would like to see some of the more experienced girls help the less experienced girls. Two of the more experienced girls on the team are Stephanie Hammer and Paulette Bonetti.

"I started playing water polo in high school," Hammer said. "I needed P.E. credits in high school, and it was a lot of fun, so I stuck with it."

Bonetti said that some of the girls are still learning the basics of water polo, such as ball handling skills.

The women open up the season on Sept. 12th and 13th in the Cypress Tournament.
